

I don't know what the complaint is here. XM is a subscription service. I pay for it, not advertisers. Why limit me on what information I get, it is egregious. My father uses XM in his truck. The ability to get up-to-date local weather and traffic is beneficial to him and many people like him who have the service and prefer it's reliability over that of regular radio. I see it this way, I pay for it, it should be me, the consumer, to decide if I should get it or not. I don't feel government regulation should be applied here. In my view, it infringes on our individual right of choice. Take this away, where is our choice? To me, the will of the people should be heard, not the will of a group who see their monopoly slipping away from them. Information belongs to the people and how we chose to get that information should remain with us. If I chose to pay for it, why should a group of people decide that I shouldn't have access. Kind of like me telling people that they can pay for an all you can eat buffett, but they can't eat the chicken because a group of people decided you couldn't have it. I like having choices and the freedom to make them. And I chose to keep my XM service the way it is, the way I paid for it, and get the information I need.
